“Find Your Dreams and Make Them Reality.”

MARCH 2011

I just want to be HAPPY!

After asking hundreds of people over the past twenty some years, “What do you want?”, the most frequent response has been, “I just want to be happy.” When the response contained the word “just” a neutral state is implied. Happiness then becomes a place that is static, unchanging, predictable and stress free. The state or place of happiness never seems to remain happy.

Happiness occurs when there is something desired then realized. It began with a clear picture or idea of what was wanted. Have you noticed that happiness is associated with acquiring the latest ‘new’ thing whether it is an I Pad, auto, diploma, job, relationship? Listen to the child that can’t wait until they tell you about the latest discovery or acquisition to understand this concept.

Built into each one of is the desire for expansion and greater expression and as this occurs we experience happiness. Where there is growth, there is joy and happiness.

Happiness begins with knowing what you want or desire. Happiness begins to appear when you take initiative or action to create that which you want. Initiative isn’t a reaction or response to something outside of yourself, but comes from within you.

“What do you want?”
